Former Sheriff T. F. McCaffrey has appealed to the supreme court a suit in which a judgment for $600 was obtained against him by the Exchange National bank of Little Rock, Ark., in the district court here. The suit was out of attachment proceedings in which the sheriff became the executive officer. He was protected by an indemnifying bond furnished by the plaintiffs, and will suffer no loss.

Baby bank burglars have begun operations again in Council Bluffs. They entered the home of Mr. and Mrs. G. L. Crouch on North Eighth street and stole the baby's bank, silver watch, carried away the marriage certificate of Mr. and Mrs. Crouch, some jewelry, together with a quantity of other little articles of no value except to the owners. All of the loot they gathered up they placed in a laundry bag for handy transportation.

Yesterday morning the bag was found lying on the tracks of the Illinois Central railroad. In it were the marriage certificate, a couple of rings, the watch and the bank. The watch had been picked open and the money extracted. Mr. Crouch is a barber, and owing to the fact that Mrs. Crouch was visiting relatives out of the city the husband had not been at his home since Thursday morning. He was apprised of the robbery after the laundry bag had been brought to the police station and the marriage certificate had disclosed its probable contents. Investigation showed that the home had been thoroughly searched for valuables, but the motive that prompted the theft of the marriage license and the additional motive that caused the abandonment of the loot nearly a mile from the residence and after the thieves had reached a safe haven not explicable to the police detectives.

The installation of the new heating plant at the Broadway Methodist church and other changes and improvements that have been under way throughout the autumn have called for the expenditure of more than $4,000. The new plant includes an entirely new kitchen with every modern convenience to permit the preparation and serving of luncheon in the church basement whenever desired. It has also included a new coal house. But the work of the church has been of importance to the public next to the comfort of the fine heating plant is overhauling of the big pipe organ, which has been under way for the last two weeks. The work has been done by an organ expert from the city, who is J. R. Arthur, the organist. The organ is one of the largest in the country. The reeds are all operated by pneumatic valves instead of lead. The whole mass of pipes have been overhauled in search of leaks. The work has also included a complete re-tuning and the organ is perhaps better condition than it has ever been since its installation nearly twenty-five years ago. Another improvement, costing about $200, is yet to be made. A turbine blower is to take the place of the present belt-driven device, which has long evidenced a disagreeable habit of bumping and knocking in tones often of such volume that the organ was unable to drown the disagreeable sounds. This device is to be installed in the near future.

GETTING READY FOR COURT

Last Day for Filing Suits for Next Term Near at Hand.

MUST BE IN BY NOON TODAY

Numerous Actions in Which Damages Are Sought Are on the Docket for Hearing Before Justices.

The expected rush of lawyers to get their cases filed in time for docketing in the November term of district court did not fully materialize yesterday, although a dozen or more cases were filed. Today will present the last opportunity to file, but as yesterday was the last day for service and the sheriff's office was not overtaxed, it is quite certain that there will not be many additional cases filed today, all must be filed before noon, as the office of the clerk is closed each Saturday at noon.

A small percentage of damage suits appeared among the filings yesterday. Five suits were against the Wabash Railroad company, and all were for alleged damages sustained by stock shipments through delays and so-called rough handling of stock.

The largest claim for alleged damages was made in a suit filed by Edward L. Dalton against the National Loan company and M. S. Welker. He accuses the loan company with malicious prosecution and asks $10,000.

August 4 last, Dalton says he was arrested at the instance of the loan company and its manager, Mr. Welker, on the charge of obtaining money under false pretenses and was obliged to remain in jail until September 25. He was indicted by the grand jury and was acquitted in the trial that followed.

Manager Barnet and the Woodland Amusement company of Manawa drew a damage suit for personal injuries alleged to have been caused by the neglect and carelessness of Manager Barnet in not providing chairs or other foot-holds upon a sidewalk leading from the Kurseal bath houses to the bathing beach. The bath houses is described as being "smooth and slick" and after Mr. Gland had purchased a 25-cent bath ticket and started to go down to the water he slipped and fell, causing him to break one of his arms. He is a tall and says his time was worth 125 a week. The expenses and the pain endured cause him to place his claim for damages at $2,500.

W. F. Adams, a driver for Abraham Gittinaky, holds his employer wholly responsible for painful injuries received when a vicious horse he was handling attacked him. He says the horse was not properly broken, and when he entered the stall to harness the animal it attacked and injured him. He asks judgment for $5,000.

Two divorce suits were filed during the day. Effie May Watson related in her petition some painful experiences that her attorney, H. V. Battey, says were fully verified by his investigation before filing the suit. She applied for her second divorce from her husband, Ira V. Watson, whom she married the first time March 25, 1897. She secured a divorce from him March 29, 1912, and then remarried him for the sake of their five children, September 23 last. She accuses him of cruelty and infidelity. The other divorce suit was by Sophia Jensen against Anton Jensen, to whom she was married here June 10, 1896. She charges habitual drunkenness and asks for household furniture and alimony.

Coal Car Hangs on Balance on Track

A long string of coal cars that were being shoved up the incline leading to the automatic coal bunkers in the Rock Island railroad yards caused an odd accident early yesterday morning.

The chute elevates the coal cars to a height of nearly twenty feet above the tracks to enable their loads to be dumped into the coal bins, the bottoms of which are high enough to permit the coal to be carried by gravity into the engine tenders.

Five heavy steel cars, each laden with fifty tons of coal, were forced up the incline. Too much steam was used or some miscalculation made, and the foremost car smashed into the heavy timbers that form the barrier at the end of the incline. The momentum was great enough to break the timbers and let the foremost car drop from the ends of the incline. The train was stopped, however, before the car had passed quite half its length beyond the rails, and it was left suspended and balancing so lightly that apparently the displacement of a chunk of coal would have turned the balance and sent it to the earth.

Workmen were set to work building a crib of ties and timbers twenty feet high underneath the suspended end from which to lift it by jackscrews until it could be pulled back upon the tracks. The switch crew in charge of the train say the brakes refused to work at the critical moment.

Trustee Madsen Brings Two Suits

Hans Madsen, trustee of the bankrupt concern of Jorgenson Brothers of Elkhorn, Ia., filed two suits in federal court yesterday. One against the Elkhorn bank involves the purchase of a lot by the bank from Peter Jorgenson, one of the members of the firm, which the trustee says was in satisfaction of a debt due the bank from the bankrupt. The lot is said to be worth about $1,200 and the bank's claim was $200, which was the amount paid on the purchase of the lot. The trustee in bankruptcy seeks to have this lot and the $200 paid by the bank reviewed by the court with a view of having it returned as part of the general assets of the bankrupt.

The second suit is against the Elkhorn Mercantile company to recover an automobile valued at $300, alleged to have been transferred by the Jorgensons to satisfy an indebtedness of $300. The suit is for the purpose of having the automobile replaced as part of the assets and the claim is that the transfers constituted a preference over the other creditors.

THANKS TO THE ARMY BOYS

Mrs. Helen Gould Shepard Acknowledges Wedding Gift from 23,500 Soldiers.

Mrs. Helen Gould Shepard has written a letter to 23,500 enlisted men of the United States army, who recently presented to her, as a token of their appreciation of her interest in the army, a silver and gold vase valued at $2,500. In the raising of which sum the 23,500 men contributed ten cents each. The gift is the first ever made by the enlisted men as a body and is by far the finest ever presented by any group of them to any person in the history of the service.

The gift was intended as a wedding present, but owing to the short time that elapsed between the announcement of Miss Gould's engagement and her marriage the soldiers who raised the fund did not have sufficient time to gather the subscriptions from the various army posts scattered all over the country and in our island possessions, so they decided to take their time and make the presentation when Mrs. Shepard returned from her honeymoon in Europe.

The gift was presented to Mrs. Shepard at Lyndhurst, her home, near Irvington-on-Hudson, three weeks ago. The soldiers who as a committee represented the 23,500 subscribers to the fund were Sergeant Major A. C. Jensen and Sergeant E. J. Maher, both of the Coast Artillery corps.

This is the letter that Mrs. Shepard has sent to her "23,500 friends" of the United States army:

Lyndhurst, Irvington-on-Hudson, N. Y., Oct. 23, 1913.

To the 23,500 enlisted men of the United States army who gave me a silver vase:

Friends, how can I ever adequately express my appreciation of the very beautiful wedding gift presented by your committee, Sergeant Jensen, Sergeant Maher, and Mr. Perkins? It is very beautiful and I am especially glad that it bears the insignia of the various divisions of the service, and also I am delighted with the inscription, but more than all I prize the friendly thought that I know so well accompanies your splendid memorial. For several years—since the Spanish war—you men of the army have made me realize and value your friendship. With many thanks and best wishes for each one of you, I am sincerely your friend, HELEN GOULD SHEPARD.

The vase presented to Mrs. Shepard is a little more than twenty-three inches high, and contains 250 ounces of silver and ninety-eight penny weights of gold. Around the body of the vase are twelve panels bearing the insignia in gold of the infantry, cavalry, field artillery, coast artillery, ordnance department, signal corps, corps of engineers, hospital corps, quartermaster's department, commissary department, musical service and the recruiting arm of the army.

Above the golden band of insignia is this inscription in applied gold letters: Presented to Miss Helen Miller Gould by 23,500 enlisted men of the United States Army as a token of appreciation. 1913.

Above the inscription is a band of ribbons woven about a succession of gold beads, while from ornaments attached to the moldings below the panels are hung festoons of laurel leaves. The vase stands upon a green marble base.—New York Times.

SALESMEN AND SIDE LINES

Employers and Travelers Discuss Question from Different Angles.

According to the current issue of The Bulletin of the National Association of Credit Men, the attention of that organization has been called to the attempts made by some business houses to sell their products as side lines by making secret contracts with traveling salesmen engaged by other houses on a regular salary basis.

Among the salesmen interviewed on the matter there was an opinion prevalent that the "knight of the grip" had no right to enter into secret contracts with other houses for handling side lines, if paid by his employers on a salary basis. By those who were paid a straight commission basis, and who paid their own expense while on the road, a different viewpoint was taken. It was maintained that the original employers had no right in such cases to demand that the road man give his entire time to their lines, providing, of course, that the handling of the principal line did not suffer from the time spent on the lesser goods. Salesmen handling side lines saw to it, it was said, that this condition did not arise, mainly because the earnings that could be made on the secondary goods were not so great as those coming from sales of the principal line.

One instance was cited of a textile salesman who earned close to $10,000 a

WALL PAPER SERVES CENTURY

Put on Walls of Mansion 119 Years Ago and Still in Good Condition.

In different parts of the state of New Jersey numerous old-fashioned dwellings are located that were built prior to the revolutionary war, and many of them are still in a fine state of preservation. Montmouth county has its share of these. Colonial homes and the Imlay mansion at Allentown must surely hold the record in this matter of being well preserved. It shows 119 years old.

Built in 1794, this dwelling, with its framework of kiln-dried oak, still stands as sound as when it was finished, 123 years ago. It was built by John Imlay, a merchant of Philadelphia, who passed the latter part of his life in this home. After a successful business career of many years, Mr. Imlay retired to his native town and built the mansion, which has long been the admiration of builders and others because of the superior character of both its exterior and interior workmanship.

Some of the most noticeable examples of old-time carpentry in the building are to be found in the parlor, with its elaborate hand-carved cornice, wainscoting and panel work above the fireplace; also in one of the bed chambers on the second floor.

A feature of the spacious halls is the broad and easy ascending stairway leading to the third floor. It has been a tradition in the family that a practical stair builder was engaged for six months in putting up this fine piece of work, prominent in which are the unsupported landings at every turn of the stairs.

But by far the most interesting feature of this old dwelling is the parlor wall paper, which was put on 119 years ago. The paper was purchased by Mr. Imlay from one William Poyneatt of Philadelphia, who imported it from London. The bill of sale, which is an interesting document, has been carefully preserved in a frame. The bill bears date April 18, 1794, the amount being £12 2s 6d, this amount including the sum paid for the paper in the room over the parlor, which was put on at the same time, but which, is of a much plainer design and has less coloring.

At the bottom of the bill is the following note: "Having only 10 pieces of the Elegant Paper I have packed it all up, but at Mr. Imlay's option, whether he chooses to keep or return what is left on putting it up, supposing that it might be agreeable to him to have some to spare in case of accident, as the same pattern cannot be replaced in case a small portion should be wanted at a future time. W. P."

The "Elegant Paper" above mentioned is that on the parlor walls, and is probably so designated in order to distinguish it from the less showy paper in the bed chamber above.

Differing from the modern method, the papers were manufactured and laid on in small sheets, in size 18x24 inches. The parlor pattern is a pleasing one, flowers, birds, festoons and other figures being liberally used by the old-time designer; and adding richness to the whole is a broad border showing various kinds of fruits. Both papers are in excellent preservation. The detail is sharp and pronounced, retaining their coloring to a remarkable degree, and they bid fair to last through many years of the future.—Philadelphia Record.

Thanks for the Actors.

In Queen Victoria's time it was the graceful custom, after a company of actors had performed before the queen, for her private secretary to send a letter of thanks next morning to the entertainers. The same form of letter was sent to all alike, and on one occasion the proprietor of a troupe of performing geese which had entertained the royal children at a Windsor garden party received the following communication from Sir Henry Ponsonby, upon whom the duty of writing the letter devolved: "I am instructed by the queen to thank you for your visit of yesterday, and to express the hope that the ladies and gentlemen of your company have returned safely to London and in good health."—Chicago News.
